The Zagreb city museum

If you want to get to know the city by exploring its rich and interesting past, visit the Zagreb City Museum which uncovers Zagreb history through legends, stories and myths, through photographs, traditional objects and artefacts.

St. Mark's Church

Mark's Square is the centre of Old Town with St. Mark's Church, built in the 13th century. The most recognizable part of the church is its roof, built in the 19th century, displaying coats of arms of Croatian regions. The church is surrounded by Banski dvori (the home of Croatian Government) on one side, and the Croatian Parliament (Sabor) on the other side.

Lotrščak Tower / Funicular

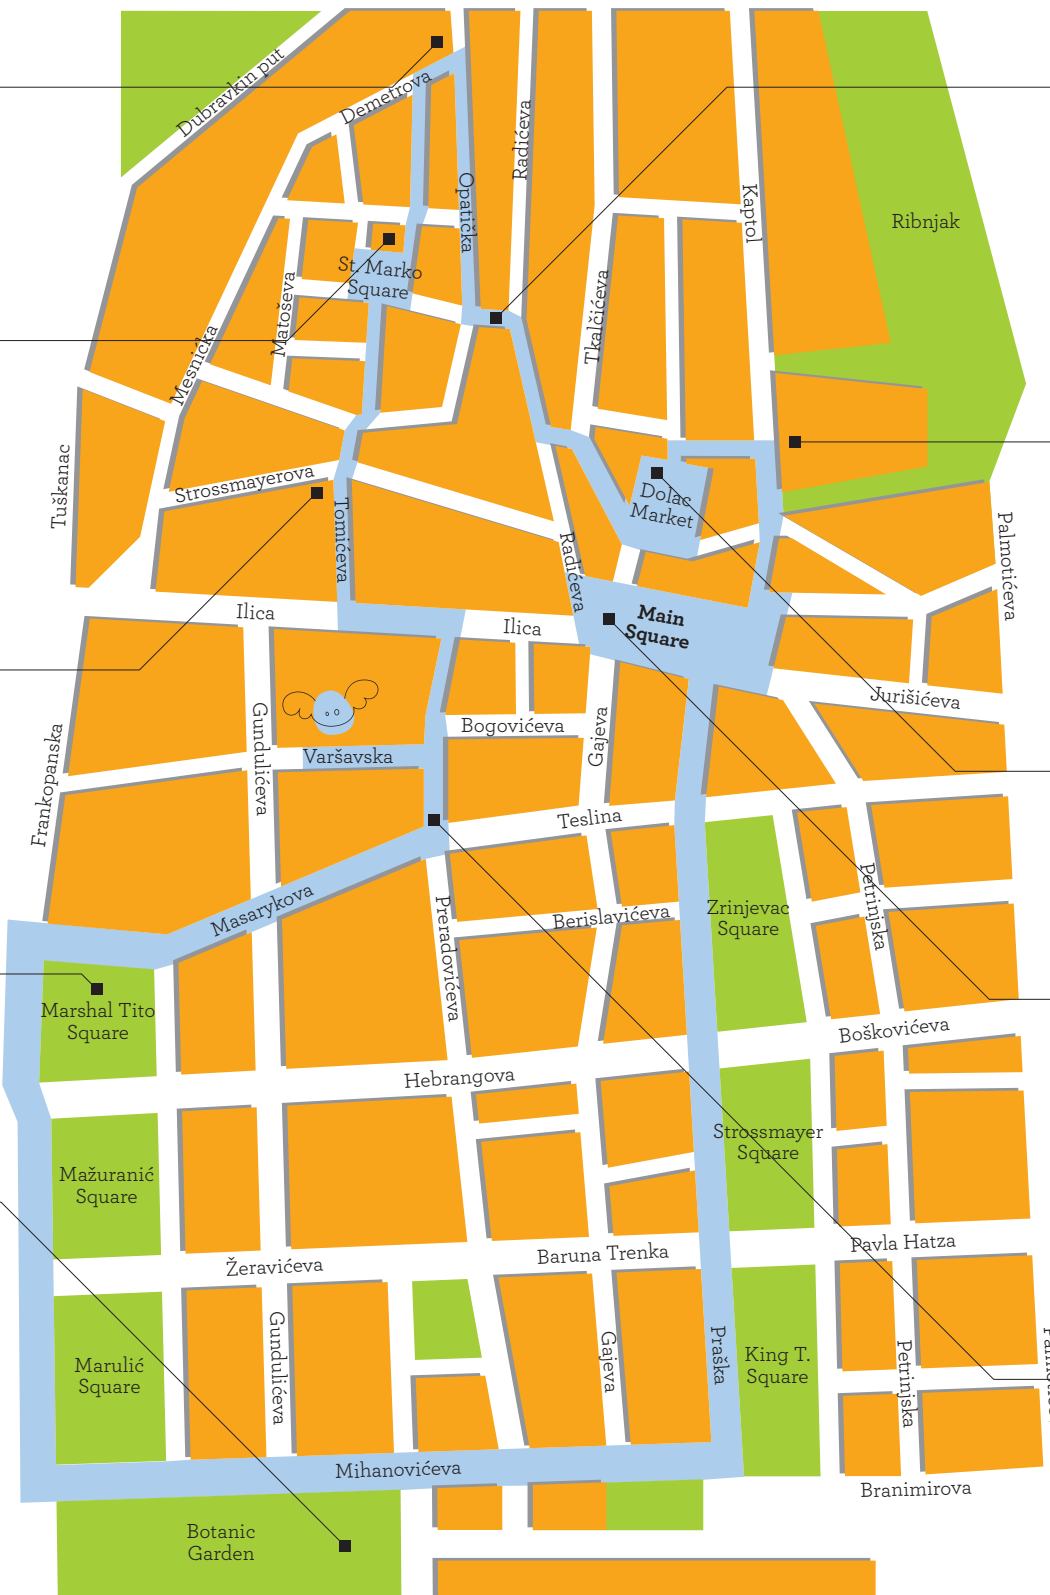

An old tower from the 13th century is today home to exhibitions. The cannon on the top fires everyday at noon, so you can check your watches. After that, take the funicular down to the longest street in Zagreb - this will take 55 seconds, and it will cost you only 5 kuna. The funicular has been in function since 1890.

HNK

The Croatian National Theatre has been a symbol of Zagreb since 1895. Turn your back to the north, face the Theatre and throw a coin into the Well of Life, a well sculpted by Ivan Meštrović.

Lenucci's Horseshoe

Lenucci's green horseshoe is a part of the most significant architectural endeavour in the construction of Zagreb. It spreads from Marshal Tito Square over Botanic Garden to Zrinjevac Square (in a shape of a horseshoe). It is where many Zagreb's monumental buildings are placed such as Croatian National Archives (Marulić Square) or Art Pavilion (Strossmayer Square), home to Zagreb Salon exhibitions. The statue of the first Croatian king is placed in front of the Central Train Station, on Tomislav Square.

Kamenita vrata (Stone Gate)

When you come to the top of Radićeva Street you can admire the only medieval city gates. There is a Mother of God Chapel inside, which survived a devastating fire in 1731. This is an ideal place where you can say a prayer and light a candle for world peace. Passing the Stone Gate you enter Kamenita Street with the oldest pharmacy in Zagreb. The pharmacy has continuously been working since 1355!

The Cathedral

Go for a walk up from Ban Jelačić Square and admire the Cathedral, romantically lit in the night. This sacral beauty was first built in the 13th century, but suffered greatly in the 1880 earthquake, as the rest of Zagreb did. Grandiose interior hides a number of legends, and there is also a secret underground passage. Blessed Alojzije Stepinac was buried in the Cathedral.

Dolac Market

This old green market was built in 1930, in the place of old, pulled down walls. Here you can find a wide selection of home-made produce from both Zagreb and the entire Croatia.

Ban Jelačić Square & Ilica Street

The main square in Zagreb, today proudly carrying the name of a Croatian Governor. If you want to feel like a true citizen of Zagreb, meet your friends underneath the Clock, as generations of our citizens have been doing.

We do not have Oxford Street or 5th Avenue, but we are proud of our main, longest street spreading on far west. Ilica Street will satisfy all your shopping needs and you will truly feel how the people of Zagreb live.

Tesla

The first point on Shappy route is the monument to Nikola Tesla, who invented electricity, in the street with the same name. The monument was made by a world renowned Croatian sculptor Ivan Meštrović.
